How is a Key Spouse Important to Me?

Key Spouses are important to you because they:

- Welcome you into your unit
- Improve morale by truly caring about family members
- Are a vital link in exchanging information between leadership and families
- Are a peer-to-peer support system on handling military life experiences
- Are knowledgeable of squadron, base, and community events
- Direct you to community information, volunteer opportunities, and referral services
- Help your family prepare for separations due to deployments and extended TDYs

A Key Spouse

Does:

- Connect
- Listen
- Inform
- Support

Does Not:

- Counsel
- Assume Leadership
- Gossip

How Can a Key Spouse Help Me?

Key Spouses can help you because they:

- “Know what it is like!”
- Share extensive knowledge of unit/ community events
- Point you in the right direction to get your questions answered
- Listen when you need to talk
- Provide support during deployments
- Help facilitate communication with unit leadership

If you do not know who your Key Spouse is, please call your your First Sergeant or the Airman & Family Readiness Center.
